In 1976, the Birmingham Historical Society created its DOWNTOWN DISCOVERY TOUR, a guided experience of the city center, and a tour book. Downtown buildings were old, tired, unused and unappreciated. But the students on tours loved them.

It’s a new century. Most of downtown’s buildings have been fixed up. Children who discovered them as students now lead tours and teach the children who take them, encouraging all to look and see, enjoy and care for our city’s heritage.

An exhibit at the Birmingham Public Library showcases the new Downtown Discovery Tour + Heritage Hunts and celebrates 25 years of tours.

Research & Documentation

Research this year included the recording of house types from the city’s earliest years to post World War II, the planning for development of public parks in the 1920s and 1930s, and civil rights history.

Above right, showing landscape architectural historian Phoebe Cutler of San Francisco Avondale Park are Jim Waters, architect for the current park restoration; Natasha (& Richard) Randolph; Marjorie White; Catherine Brown, president of the Friends of Avondale Park; and Carol Slaughter. Photographed by Richard Randolph.

Below right, Powell School students and their Auburn architectural school Buddies photographed and drew details of the 1887 Powell School. New uses are currently being sought for the historic school building.

Left, Joy Philpot; right, Gregory Wilson, Victor Blackledge and Lola Hendricks led the try outs of the new History Hunts, as part of a Birmingham Cultural Alliance Program. Praises to Peggy for holding down the fort at the office and getting this report to you.
