Dan Byrum, Dee Haynes, Bill Tharpe, Marjorie White, and Dave Cisco, pictured with a Philco model 189L rigged to play old radio shows, organized the Turning On Alabama. The exhibition explores how the power for lights and radios, industry and agriculture was developed, transmitted, and marketed by Alabama Power from 1920 to 1945.
The Society celebrated our civil rights heritage with completion of National Register and World Heritage nominations and marker dedications. The First Baptist Church of Ensley saluted its historic church and parsonage, the Alfred Daniel Williams King House. Naomi Barber King (Mrs. A. D.) is pictured at the parsonage in 1963 and 2007.

With her eagle eye and immense acumen, Trustee Katie Tipton presides over the editing of the files of this year’s book, Hand Down Unharmed-Olmsted Files on Birmingham Parks, 1920-1925. This inside look at five years in a growing city’s life — the people, the events, the passion as well as what it really takes (the hard work, the disappointments, the personal battles) to plant the seeds of a vision of a park system for Birmingham. It’s a great story.
The Heritage Society gathered with Henry and Mary Moren Crommelin to enjoy their home, a masterful design by architect For their support of “the public good,” the Society honored Sam Frazier for his decades of leadership (above); the founding partners of the Norwood Resource Center at the Nygren House: Robert Gilmore, Norwood Neighborhood Association, St. Luke’s Church and The Crisis Center (below); and the No Elevated-Citizens to Save 280 of Mountain Brook and Homewood who joined with city officials to develop alternatives to an elevated expressway (below, right). Among other award winners are Dru and Susan Ellard (above) for their old house revival on Southside; Chad and Chesney Moore and their parents for the transformation of the historic Rialto Theatre (above, right); and the team of architectural, engineering, and organizational talent that led the exterior stabilization campaign at Sixteenth Street Baptist Church (right).

President Lillie Fincher and Sallie Lee accept the Keep Birmingham Beautiful award from Mayor Bernard Kincaid for our growing garden. Located on a former concrete plant site, roses, collards, purple runner beans, watermelon, and especially herbs are doing fabulous, as are UAB student volunteers.

The Heritage Society gathered with Henry and Mary Moren Crommelin to enjoy their home, a masterful design by architect D. O. Whilldin amidst festivities orchestrated for the society by Pat and Margaret Camp.
